SUMMARY

A gas is released making mankind immortal, but also sterile. Despite the infinite opportunities made possible, mankind quickly becomes disillusioned. To prevent widespread depression, a machine is invented to enable people to travel through memory...

"This film is a trip, a surreal vision "à la Germaine Dulac" in Version 2.0, in which the director shows a startling flair for narration, rhythm and above all, editing..."

... the science fiction storyline is carried by a voice-over in which memory interacts with the present, as if a response or love-letter-in-film to Chris Marker's La Jetée ...

... you leave the film dumbfounded, in admiration ..., bowled over by its searing intensity, by the power of the links drawn, the pure beauty of certain images, the staggering rhythm of the plot..."
